WORLD'S FAIR FEATURES.

Notable Exhibits to Be Seen at St. Louis.

A colossal dome covered with clusters of grain and grasses constitutes the beautiful centerpiece of Oregon's exhibit in the Palace of Agriculture at the St. Louis world's fair. Even the eight huge pillars supporting the dome are incased in artistically arranged bunches of golden grain and native wild grasses and forage plants that grow to such prodigious size in the fertile fields of Oregon.

The dome is surmounted with an enormous bundle of wheat, towering six feet above the canopy. One of the sides of the kiosk is a wall of grasses, the centerpiece being a bunch of buffalo grass covering a space 7 by 4 feet. This is surrounded by bunches of alfalfa, sweet peas and clover and nearly twenty other kinds of Oregon grasses. Altogether 265 varieties of grain and 165 varieties of grasses are used in this exhibit. More than a hundred different kinds of wheat are used, some having grown to the height of more than seven feet. Rye, barley and buckwheat in many varieties also appear in this exhibit and help to beautify the handsomely decorated dome.

Occupying a prominent place inside the dome is a large seal of the coat of arms of Oregon done in grain. It is three feet eight inches in diameter and is made of wheat, oats, rye, millet and other seeds. This work of art was executed by a sixteen-year-old Oregon boy, George Bonnie of Woodburn. Above the state seal is the word "Welcome," made of prunes. The word "Oregon" in prunes appears in two places on the outside of the dome.

A reproduction, modeled in butter, of the first creamery erected in the west, which was built by John Stewart in 1872 near Manchester, Delaware county, Ia., is exhibited by Iowa in the Palace of Agriculture.

A pair of scissors seven feet long is an exhibit in the Palace of Varied Industries. The blades are of nickel steel and the handles are of solid gold bronze, very massive and designed in the Gothic style. The scissors were especially made for exhibition at a cost of $3,000.

A weed patch is exhibited by the government. Here every species of weed which troubles the farmer of any section of the United States is shown.

Dream of Japan's Empress.

A pretty story is told in a Tokyo newspaper of a dream the empress of Japan has had, says the Tokyo correspondent of the New York American. It is said that the empress dreamed she saw a Japanese naval officer who, bending low to her, said: "Do not be anxious; I am watching over the troops. All will be well." As is the way in dreams, he then disappeared. The empress was shown by one of her family many pictures of various naval officers, and at last, coming to one, she said, "That is the man." The photograph in question was a likeness of Admiral Sakamoto, a famous Japanese admiral who died thirty-eight years ago. Thereupon, so it is said, the empress expressed herself quite happy in mind, assured that victory lies with Japan.
